

Each stroke of her brush held more meaning than the last. She wished someone was there to witness her masterpiece. If only anyone cared about the strokes as much as she did. She hoped that one day, more people would walk around with paint stained fingers. ~~One day she would see it all come to life.~~ One day she would see it all come to life.

Her creation would change mankind. All suffering would be forgotten for all of eternity. She turned on the switch and the electricity surged. Lightning flickered through the sky!

Then a knock rapped on the door, startling the woman. Visitors don't come by often in her village. She lit her torch and decided to open the door. Darkness had always been a fear of hers, but ignoring the fact she turned the knob. She saw the face of a man.

At first she didn't recognize him. She had to take a double take and then she realized that he was her husband. She thought at first she was seeing a ghost so she ran from him. She turned the corner and though she escaped him, she peered her head around to see where he was, and he was gone.

Sarah Lopez
Holly Thomas

Cassidy Williams

Caroline Steele